SUBJECT: THE DIFFERENCES BETWEEN A REGULATORY AGENCY AND AN ASSOCIATION?

DATED April 2012; Revised November 2017

Here are the top 10 differences between a regulatory agency/College, such as CASLPO, and an association of professionals, such as the Ontario Association of Speech-Language Pathologists and Audiologists (OSLA):

	Regulator	Association
1	Acts in the interest of the public and educates them about the College	Acts in the interest of the profession and educates the public about what services are provided by members
2	Governed by a Council composed of elected professional members; government appointed public members; academics	Governed by a Board of Directors composed of professionals
3	Registers members based on legislated criteria. Membership is mandatory in order to practice	Accepts members based on association-determined criteria. Membership is voluntary
4	Requires all members of College to participate in annual mandatory quality assurance programs	Provides members with opportunities for voluntary continuing education
5	Sets mandatory standards of practice for members to ensure safe and competent service provided to patients	Provides non-binding Practice advisories and guides for members
6	Engages the public in order to inform them of the value of self-regulation and the expectations for care provided by professionals	Engages the members so as to enhance their professional needs in order to better care for their patients
7	Required to have a formal complaints process in place to respond to complaints about members who do not practice to the set standards and/or who engage in disreputable conduct	Not required to have a formal complaints process in place

8	Does not engage in public political advocacy activities	Advocates for the profession in order to effect changes to service delivery, to develop specialty certificates, increase public awareness of professional services; enhance scopes of practice; facilitate purchase of professional liability insurance
9	Provides accessible information to the public regarding the professions, the registry of members, expected practice standards and the complaints process	Provides accessible information to its members regarding professional development opportunities, changes in the professional practice fields, political developments that affect the professions
10	Accountable to the public, the government and the members	Accountable to the members
